How to Make Kids Feel Special (EMAILWIRE.COM, August 30, 2010 ) Las Vegas, Nev. -- Children also need to be able to distinguish between what's "special" and what's just "normal" in their daily lives. It's especially important for the majority of parents to take the time to offer up just a few minutes of special attention for their children, such as some unexpected special time with them every day, like during breakfast or while doing a special chore. "Children need to be able to see that they are not the only ones in the world who have family members or friends to be special to," said Lynne Pinasse, President and CEO of Infant Research & Education, Inc. "The moments that are special for a child should not only be shared with them but also with their family and friends. It's also important for the family and friends to be able to enjoy those moments with the child. It's not just about the child; it's about the whole family." To be able to make children feel special in their daily life, it's important that parents be able to recognize the emotions of their children and act accordingly. Some ways that parents can help their children feel special include: Follow through on their child's wishes: Some children may be more likely to ask to play with a special toy, watch a special cartoon or do a special activity than other children.
