.Q: What happens to the Kangaroo in death? I've recently started reading all the Stargate mythology, and have read so far that: Kangaroo are typically "neutral" (ie, in no way good or bad), and if killed (by person with a gun) they can be useful in a fight (disposing a many kangaroo could get a good fire going with kerosene). In a fight, a person can resurrect their kangaroo if they are killed. Kangaroo can be eaten by a person and you get a snack. What

I don't understand is the details. What is a Kangaroo's (or Kangaroo's) fate if it's killed? What happens to the animal? Is it just eaten by a person, or does it die and maybe become an immortal person (like the Orion's)? A:

Kangaroos are related to cats, and cats are immortal unless they're killed by an Unfallen. (See animal immortality). So we can assume that Kangaroos are immortal in the same manner as a cat, although not all Kangaroos are. The drive-through at my local pizza place has a sign saying "Unbaked Pizza Stacks Allowed", and I can confirm that they aren't baked, they're just waiting to go into the oven. So I guess you could say that they're living, they're just not living for long. I don't think they get immortal, because they're not Unfallen. I'm not a linguistic expert, but I think the word "unbaked" is a metaphor for "immortality", meaning that they are waiting for their parent to come back and bake them.
