What are the nutritional compositions of edible oils? Let's just consider for fats and oils first. So as you can see from this image... Food-science.info.main.. Nutrition Composition of Edible Oils and Fats. Improper use of oil can pose many health problems; for example, it can increase the risk of cardiovascular disease and cancer. Oils consist of a variety of substances. The main constituents of dietary oils are the fatty acids, the diglycerides, triglycerides, phospholipids, and free fatty acids. Free fatty acids include esters of long-chain saturated and unsaturated fatty acids, mainly palmitic and stearic acids, with saturated and unsaturated alcohols. The nutritional compositions of edible oils are given in Table 1. For the oils described in Table 1, including all vegetable oils, pumpkin seed oil, and mustard seed oil, the average caloric value is 4 kcal/g; linseed oil is the only exception, with an average caloric value of 9 kcal/g. Olive oil contains more than 70% oleic acid, the most abundant and healthful monounsaturated fat in the American diet. Over 15% of the calories in olive oil are from monounsaturated fat. More importantly, 100% of the calories in olive oil come from fat. This means it is not possible to switch from olive oil to another oil, which can be saturated and still be low in fat. (An alternative for those who cannot or prefer not to eat oil is to use butter.) Another oil that's rich in mono-unsaturated fat and low in saturated fat is canola oil. In contrast to olive oil, which is monounsaturated rich, canola oil contains a large amount of polyunsaturated fat. In general, the more polyunsaturated fat, the better the health of the heart. Oleic acid makes up about 70 to 80 percent of the calories in olive oil. Olive oil is the best source of vitamin E (alpha-tocopherol) in the typical American diet. About 25 percent of all the vitamin E you consume in the average diet comes from this oil. Olive oil has a host of other health-promoting benefits as well. For example, olive oil is a good source of monounsaturated fatty acids, dietary fiber, antioxidants, and a number of other nutrients. In
